01 — WHO I AM

Seeing service from the guest's side

I am a Business Administration graduate based in Makkah. In every role so far, I have paid close attention to how people experience a brand — and, more recently, how they experience being welcomed.

For approximately four and a half years I worked in marketing and influencer relations at Rasees Perfumes. The work was built on relationships: reaching out to creators, negotiating, coordinating send-outs and payments, following up on content, and reporting on each campaign.

During the 2026 Hajj season I moved into a guest-facing role, supporting international pilgrims at Dar Al Shorouq. It confirmed something I had seen from the marketing side: people remember how they were treated in the small moments.

I now want to build a career in hospitality, where both sides of my experience — understanding people and handling details — meet in the same place.

02 — HAJJ SEASON 2026

A Lesson from Hajj

With Rawaf Mina Company, I helped international pilgrims with their inquiries, check-in and check-out, and Nusuk activation. One moment from that season has stayed with me.

THE NEED

On a busy Friday, an elderly European pilgrim travelling alone needed to rejoin her group at the Haram for her Umrah arrangements.

WHY IT MATTERED

The area was crowded and taxis were hard to reach. She did not know how to use ride-hailing apps, and she had no Saudi Riyals in cash.

WHAT I DID

- Walked with her to the main road.
- Helped her exchange her euros into Saudi Riyals.
- Arranged a taxi and confirmed the fare with the driver.
- Made sure he understood exactly where she needed to go.

THE RESULT

She was happy and grateful.

WHAT I LEARNED

Each obstacle was small on its own. Together, they stood between her and her group. Good service meant seeing all of them at once, and staying with her until each one was solved.

Hospitality is not only about completing a service. It is about noticing what a person needs, taking appropriate action, and helping them feel welcomed, heard, and supported.

WHAT HAJJ TAUGHT ME

03 — TRANSFERABLE EXPERIENCE

What Marketing Taught Me About Guest Experience

My background in marketing and influencer relations taught me that every interaction shapes how people perceive a brand. It strengthened my ability to communicate with different personalities, coordinate details, manage expectations, and follow through. I want to bring these strengths into hospitality, where the quality of an interaction can become part of a guest's memory of their stay.

IN MARKETING	IN GUEST EXPERIENCE
Influencer relations, working with a database of 300+ Snapchat creators	→ Reading different audiences and adapting how I communicate
Ongoing relationships with influencers and partners	→ Building trust through respectful, consistent contact
Supporting 40+ campaigns, including seasonal and National Day activities	→ Managing moving parts, deadlines and several requests at once
Negotiation, product send-outs, payments and content follow-up	→ Setting clear expectations and seeing each request through to closure
Checking content against brand guidelines	→ Representing a brand consistently and professionally
Campaign reporting and performance tracking	→ Noticing details, outcomes and what could be done better

Working across Snapchat, TikTok and Instagram, I learned to keep many conversations moving at once without losing the thread of any of them — and that a partner's trust is earned in the follow-up, not the first message.

None of this makes me an expert in hotel operations, and I do not present it that way. I have completed Opera System training and I am ready to learn the hotel's procedures properly. What I bring is a way of working: listen first, coordinate carefully, close the loop.

04 — JUMEIRAH JABAL OMAR MAKKAH

How I Could Contribute

Jumeirah Jabal Omar Makkah welcomes guests a few minutes' walk from Masjid Al Haram, many of them on one of the most meaningful journeys of their lives. While researching Jumeirah, I read about its HEART service philosophy. It describes the kind of service I want to give, and I recognise parts of my own experience in it.

H	HUMAN	Helping pilgrims far from home feel welcomed and listened to, rather than simply processed.
E	ENGAGING	Communicating with people of many backgrounds and personalities — international pilgrims during Hajj, and hundreds of content creators in marketing.
A	ATTENTIVE	Campaign coordination trained me to track many small details — deliveries, payments, deadlines — and to notice when one is missing.
R	RESPONSIVE	When an elderly guest who did not speak Arabic became unwell, I contacted emergency medical services straight away, accompanied the responders to her room, and stayed while they attended to her.
T	THOUGHTFUL	Afterwards, I brought her ice packs, Panadol and food from the buffet. She thanked me for my help — a reminder of how much a small gesture can mean.

WHAT I WOULD AIM TO BRING

i.

Thoughtful Guest Communication

Listening carefully, understanding what a guest needs, and responding clearly and respectfully — with patience for guests navigating an unfamiliar place.

ii.

Reliable Coordination

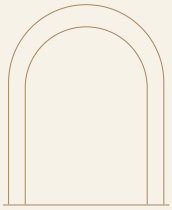

Following each request through to closure, keeping track of details, supporting colleagues, and learning the hotel's procedures and systems properly.

iii.

A Customer-Centred Perspective

Remembering that a stay is shaped by many small interactions, not only the main transaction — and giving each one proper care.

HEART (Human, Engaging, Attentive, Responsive, Thoughtful) is Jumeirah's published service philosophy. It appears here as my own reading of it; I have not been trained in it, and this profile is not affiliated with Jumeirah.

05 — AN OPEN INVITATION

I would welcome a conversation.

I would value the opportunity to contribute to the guest experience at Jumeirah Jabal Omar Makkah, and to learn from a team whose standards I respect. While my initial interest may be in a specific position, I would also welcome consideration for other suitable opportunities in Guest Experience, Guest Relations, Reservations, or hospitality coordination, depending on the role requirements and current openings.

Guest Experience	Guest Relations	Reservations	Hospitality Coordination

I would be glad to share my full CV and to discuss my experience in more detail at a time that suits the team.

Thank you for your time and consideration.
